Richard Holledge has the latest from Brazil, Canada, Turkey and Cyprus

Short hop to Humber Valley

Humber Valley Resort in Canada's Newfoundland is releasing 18 more apartments and ten townhouses. The new homes overlook the golf course.

It's almost as convenient to ski here as Europe, say the developers: five hours from Gatwick and 20 minutes from the airport. Two-bed flats from £208,397, and townhouses from £252,271.

A million trees can't be wrong

Cyprus-based developer Leptos is doing its bit for the environment, planting one million trees at Yeroskipou. The company employs 35 gardeners to look after its developments. Currently, it is building Vikla Village, just outside Paphos. Prices for a two-bed villa start at £169,000.

Flower power in Brazil

Actor Antonio Banderas and footballer Ronaldo have already bought homes at Grand Natal Golf, Grupo Sanchez's new project in Natal, Brazil. Direct flights from London Gatwick start at just £190 return. The development's four phases are each named after a Brazilian flower - Miltonia, Galatea, Solanum and Marginata. Two-bedroom apartments with sea views are available from £57,771. Owners will have use of all the facilities at Grand Natal Golf.

Turquoise delight

Turkish developer Kemer Mediterra has launched LaVanta, overlooking historic Kalkan on the country's Turquoise Coast. With prices ranging from £69,000 for a one-bed apartment to £350,000 (plus 18 per cent 'luxury' tax) for a five-bed villa, LaVanta is aimed at buyers looking for quality and capital growth potential.
